THE CATTLE KING.

Varying Fortunes of John T. Alexander.

A correspondent of the Quiney Whip stites as follows of Mr. John T. Alexander, widely known as the "Great Cattle King of the Mississippi Valley," who died recently in Jacksonville, III.

"Mr. Alexander was in his fifty-fifth year, and few men have done more to advance the interests of the West. He was a Virginian by birth, but spent his early years in Ohio, and assisted his father in driving cattle from that State over the Alleghany Mountains to the Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York and Boston markets. He was thus brought up in the cattle trade, and when, at the age of twenty, his father suffered a nevere financial reverse, young Alexander came West to try his own luck. He came to St. Louis and afterward traveled through Central Illinois, from which region he to try his own luck. He came to St. Louis and afterward traveled through Central Illinois, from which region he collected and drove, on foot, his first veniure in Western cattle to the East. After trading for three or lour years, he began, in 1815, to open his farm in this country, now on the Toledo, Wabash and Western Enilroad, near the station known by his mime. These lands were brought to a state of excellent pasturage, and then Mr. Alexander started out on his venture, which was one of the very first of the kind, dealing in Texas cattle. Although it was then necessary to drive them to Logansport, Ind., the exarcst railroad terminus, thence ship by rail to Toledo, and thence again by steamer and rail to New York, he fast accuplated a fortune. He continued to ship from 11,000 to 15,000 head yearly, but with little further gain, till the breaking out of the war, when he launched out at fall length in the mule trade, making his purchases mostly in Missouri, where prices were for a time remarkably easy. Not oftell of the war was over he had settled off a large amount of debts in which he had been involved by previous transactions.

been involved by previous transactions in Texas cattle, was out of debt entirely, had 7,200 acres of land valued at $75 an had 7,200 acres of land valued at 970 acre, and had a deposit of over $100,000 in bank. It would appear that such an accumulation of means could hardly meet with a reverse; but such was not the case. He purchased the farm known as see. He purchased the farm known as the 'Broad Lands', near the Toledo, Wabsah and Western Railroad, in Champaign county, a tract of twenty-six thousand acres, and began its improvement. About the same time he suffered heavy losses by the repudiation of contracts with certain railroad companies, so that his entire loss in the space of a year and a half amounted to near two hundred and fifty thousand solilars, and he stood apparently face to face with a crisis in his affairs. He found dollars, and he stood apparently face to face with a crisis in his affairs. He found what seemed to be a way out of the trou ble by a sale which he negotiated, in effect, with a Canadian company for the Broad Lands Farm for $625,000; but the

Buying a Husband for $25.

Buying a Husband for $25.

A slender young woman slipped into Justice Riley's private office in Brooklyon on Friday morning, and said that she lived with a lady who objected to having James Malone, her best gentleman friend, see her at the basement door, because he solied the flagstones with tobacco juice. The night before James stayed with her until eleven o'clock, and Friday morning the lady turned her out of the house. The lady owed her '810, and she wished to have the Justice tell her how to get it. He told her to make a complaint, but she said that she wished the money at once for a particular reason, which was a secret. The secret that she finally imparted to the Justice on his promise not to tell, was that she was very anxious to marry James Malone, and she couldn't doit without the $10. The Justice was puzzled until the girl handed him a crumpled bit of paper, on which was written the following:

BROOKLYK, July 4, 1876.—I will marry Johanna Phalen three months from the above date, if she gives me $25.

JAMES MALONE.

"We were looking at the fireworks at above date, if she gives he e-so.

"We were looking at the fireworks at Fort Greene, Judge," the girl added, "on the Fourth of July. Jimmy says, says be, Johanna, I would like to marry you, but I'm hard up. If you make it worth while for me to get married, if you will give me, say $255, I will promise to-marry you.' I said I'd give him the money, and when we got home that night Jimmy put what he had said in writing. I have saved all I can, Judge, and have given Jimmy $20, and I want five more to give him." The Judge gave her his only advice, to make her complaint in a suit for wages, which she did.

wages, which she did.

The Potato Beffle Abboad.—There are some things in this world quite beyond the reach of even the most ingenious legislation, and one of these, doubtless, is the peregrinating Colorado beetle. This troublesome little insect has travelled a good many thousand miles since he started from his birth place beyond the Rocky mountains, and if it had been possible to arrest him by Governor's proclamations or acts of State Assemblies probably ere this we should have had "appropriate legislation." As it is the beetle has had things pretty much his own way, and now that he has reached the Atlantic coast, and is casting his wistful eye upon perspective potato patches on the other side of the Atlantic, naturally enough people over there are taking the alarm. The London Times of 28th, publishes a communication which announces that "a living specimen has already been found in a bag of maire in the docks at Bremen, the maize being part of a cargo that had just arrived from New York." Thereupon careful precautions on the part of the "proper authorities" are urged to prevent the pest from getting a foothold in Furope, Tenthorities" are urged to prevent the pest from getting a foothold in Europe. Precautions of every kind having been futile here, it remains to be seen what they are worth on the other side of the Atlantic. As for the bug himself, he seems determined to push on with a perseverence worthy of a better cause until there are no further fields to conquer.
